Hereby, I would like to express my gratitude towards the Liechtensteinische Landesbank (LLB) for providing me with the dataset which was at the core of this research. It certainly would not have been possible to write this thesis without their support. In particular, I would like to mention Thomas Seiler, Head of Group Multi Channel Management, who was always available for questions regarding the electronic banking at LLB. Also, I would like to thank Evelyn Öhri, who is in charge of human resources at LLB, for her effort in making this project possible.

Moreover, I would like to acknowledge my thesis advisor Prof. Dr. Martin Brown of the Banking faculty at the University of St.Gallen. He showed great interest in my work and steered me in the right way whenever I needed it. However, he consistently allowed this thesis to be my own work. Moreover, I must mention the valuable input of his research assistant Nicole Hentschel. Her passionate participation made this research project a lot easier to realise.

Finally, I must express my very profound gratitude to my parents for providing me with unfailing support and continuous encouragement throughout my years of study and through the process of researching and writing this thesis. This accomplishment would not have been possible without them. Thank you.
